User Safety Recommendations

Many factors affect fruit set including: tree vigor, provisions for cross-pollination, weather conditions and bee activity. Other important considerations are last years fruit set level and current years food reserve status which is affected by crop load and foliage vigor in the preceding year. Weather conditions, amount of bloom and other factors that make for good set will vary in different locations. Contact your local Extension Pomologist as to long-term flow rates to be used for your specific thinning problems. Limit the use of the higher concentrations given in the tables below over vigorous trees having ample provisions for pollination and good fruit set. Use the lower concentration rates (25-40ppm) for thinning trees that have lower fruit set potential. One of the outstanding advantages of Amid-Thin® W from the standpoint of over thinning is that the need for adjusting concentration rates is minimal and very unlikely that early summer varietals are sprayed no later than petal fall since applications two to three weeks later often give insufficient thinning and may result in the development of inferior pygmy fruit.
